

FOR FAVORS WOMAN SUFFRAGE.
The Rev. David Mitchell of Jersey City expresses His Views in His Testimony.

The Rev. David Mitchell, the pastor of the Scotch Presbyterian Church in Jersey City, in a discourse delivered in his pulpit last night expressed himself in favor of woman suffrage. He took his text from Proverbs xxii, 25: "Strive and honor her clothing, and she shall reward in the time to come." He said in part:

"This you may say is in Solomon's view, that woman is not the ordinary everyday one. Is this ideal woman to be found? We feel certain there are wives and mothers like this in every home; if you look around, you will still see these treated as if it were an inferior race. But changes are taking place. Woman is beginning to think and act for herself. She is being limited to the medical and legal professions, and in all these she is getting into her own way. Her efforts are being accomplished except on three. Woman has yet to be enfranchised. While women would be unworthy voters, there would be no reason to do so if it were ignorant of both sexes from the franchises, as has already been done in the case of convicted criminals."

The great mass of our sisters will be bright, intelligent, highly principled voters, and their influence will give the sound or moral reform and the advancement of civilization."

FASTOR GREENING DESIGNS.

Buys His Opponents Called Him Every-thing and Then Reduced His Salary.

CART, MAY 16.—For two months there have been two factions in the First Baptist Church, and to-day the Rev. Albert F. Greening, the pastor, resigned, the resignation to take effect on Sept. 15. The fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the church was celebrated two months ago. No especial trouble was anticipated on that occasion, but when the exercises began some of the members, headed by the wife of the church's first pastor and soldier in the Civil War, Rev. Dr. Leavenworth, Rev. T. E. Richards of Cape May Court House, a former member in Spurgeon's church in London, and others, threatened to leave. The choir or Pastor Greening either, and Richards, it is said, was snubbed and the regular programs carried out.

Mr. Greening, the pastor says, he has been called a thief and an imposter by his opponents, and on Wednesday his salary, without his consent, was reduced $1,000 to $1,500. The resignation was accepted. Mr. Greening is the sixth pastor in ten years, and about one-third of this time the pulpit has been vacant. Five-sixths of the members are

UNPLEASANT SIGHT TO JACK TARS.
The Gates of a Naval Cemetery Locked with an Anti-Escutcheon.

The tall iron gates of the little cemetery which forms a triangular part under the shadow of the yellow tower of the New Hospital in Brooklyn, locked with a brass iron lock, as is used to fasten a refractory prisoner on shipboard. No one seems to know who authorized the use of such an article for the purpose, but many of the relatives and friends of the deceased Jack Tars and marines are indignant. Half a dozen women visited the cemetery yesterday, but were unable to gain admittance. The public gates at the head of Williamsburg were closed and the anchor iron snared in the gate.

The marine who is stationed at the gates of the Naval Hospital had he heard that an iron lock was used to fasten the gates, he would not have opened them at all. Several other marines at the barracks said that the hospital authorities would not be particular in the use of these men who were keeping the iron gates as Governmental to remove the objectionable lock. Said one of them:

"I have seen a sailor or marine to see the gates of the graveyard where he may have to be buried some day locked with an iron. It's worse than fastening the gates of a penitentiary graveyard with handcuffs."

Landing a 45-pound Muskallonge.

GROVELAND, N. Y., June 10.—Alfred Sicker of this place opened the fishing season on Conesus Lake by breaking all previous single-catch records in the war of muskallonges. Sicker was trolling past Maple Beach when he got the strike. He was rowing fast, but the strike was so heavy that it stopped the boat and almost jerked the fisherman over the gunwale. Before he could get the fish well in hand, it had turned the boat around in the water and started to roll. The fish was so large it tended to roll for half an hour. He was then nearly "tuckered out," and he called for help. W. E. Hoy and J. S. Ward went out in a boat to his assistance. They saw the fish swim ashore, near shore, after several attempts. Hoy fastened an iron hook in the side of the muskallonge, and it took him 15 minutes to haul forty-five pounds and four ounces, eight pounds heavier than the biggest one ever previously taken in Conesus Lake.

Cook Calendars This Day.

GREENWOOD, N. Y., June 10.—Alfred Sicker of this place opened the fishing season on Conesus Lake by breaking all previous single-catch records in the war of muskallonges. Sicker was trolling past Maple Beach when he got the strike. He was rowing fast, but the strike was so heavy that it stopped the boat and almost jerked the fisherman over the gunwale. Before he could get the fish well in hand, it had turned the boat around in the water and started to roll. The fish was so large it tended to roll for half an hour. He was then nearly "tuckered out," and he called for help. W. E. Hoy and J. S. Ward went out in a boat to his assistance. They saw the fish swim ashore, near shore, after several attempts. Hoy fastened an iron hook in the side of the muskallonge, and it took him 15 minutes to haul forty-five pounds and four ounces, eight pounds heavier than the biggest one ever previously taken in Conesus Lake.

Landing a 45-pound Muskallonge.

GROVELAND, N. Y., June 10.—Alfred Sicker of this place opened the fishing season on Conesus Lake by breaking all previous single-catch records in the war of muskallonges. Sicker was trolling past Maple Beach when he got the strike. He was rowing fast, but the strike was so heavy that it stopped the boat and almost jerked the fisherman over the gunwale. Before he could get the fish well in hand, it had turned the boat around in the water and started to roll. The fish was so large it tended to roll for half an hour. He was then nearly "tuckered out," and he called for help. W. E. Hoy and J. S. Ward went out in a boat to his assistance. They saw the fish swim ashore, near shore, after several attempts. Hoy fastened an iron hook in the side of the muskallonge, and it took him 15 minutes to haul forty-five pounds and four ounces, eight pounds heavier than the biggest one ever previously taken in Conesus Lake.

Cook Calendars This Day.

GREENWOOD, N. Y., June 10.—Alfred Sicker of this place opened the fishing season on Conesus Lake by breaking all previous single-catch records in the war of muskallonges. Sicker was trolling past Maple Beach when he got the strike. He was rowing fast, but the strike was so heavy that it stopped the boat and almost jerked the fisherman over the gunwale. Before he could get the fish well in hand, it had turned the boat around in the water and started to roll. The fish was so large it tended to roll for half an hour. He was then nearly "tuckered out," and he called for help. W. E. Hoy and J. S. Ward went out in a boat to his assistance. They saw the fish swim ashore, near shore, after several attempts. Hoy fastened an iron hook in the side of the muskallonge, and it took him 15 minutes to haul forty-five pounds and four ounces, eight pounds heavier than the biggest one ever previously taken in Conesus Lake.

Cook Calendars This Day.

GREENWOOD, N. Y., June 10.—Alfred Sicker of this place opened the fishing season on Conesus Lake by breaking all previous single-catch records in the war of muskallonges. Sicker was trolling past Maple Beach when he got the strike. He was rowing fast, but the strike was so heavy that it stopped the boat and almost jerked the fisherman over the gunwale. Before he could get the fish well in hand, it had turned the boat around in the water and started to roll. The fish was so large it tended to roll for half an hour. He was then nearly "tuckered out," and he called for help. W. E. Hoy and J. S. Ward went out in a boat to his assistance. They saw the fish swim ashore, near shore, after several attempts. Hoy fastened an iron hook in the side of the muskallonge, and it took him 15 minutes to haul forty-five pounds and four ounces, eight pounds heavier than the biggest one ever previously taken in Conesus Lake.

Landing a 45-pound Muskallonge.

GROVELAND, N. Y., June 10.—Alfred Sicker of this place opened the fishing season on Conesus Lake by breaking all previous single-catch records in the war of muskallonges. Sicker was trolling past Maple Beach when he got the strike. He was rowing fast, but the strike was so heavy that it stopped the boat and almost jerked the fisherman over the gunwale. Before he could get the fish well in hand, it had turned the boat around in the water and started to roll. The fish was so large it tended to roll for half an hour. He was then nearly "tuckered out," and he called for help. W. E. Hoy and J. S. Ward went out in a boat to his assistance. They saw the fish swim ashore, near shore, after several attempts. Hoy fastened an iron hook in the side of the muskallonge, and it took him 15 minutes to haul forty-five pounds and four ounces, eight pounds heavier than the biggest one ever previously taken in Conesus Lake.

Landing a 45-pound Muskallonge.

GROVELAND, N. Y., June 10.—Alfred Sicker of this place opened the fishing season on Conesus Lake by breaking all previous single-catch records in the war of muskallonges. Sicker was trolling past Maple Beach when he got the strike. He was rowing fast, but the strike was so heavy that it stopped the boat and almost jerked the fisherman over the gunwale. Before he could get the fish well in hand, it had turned the boat around in the water and started to roll. The fish was so large it tended to roll for half an hour. He was then nearly "tuckered out," and he called for help. W. E. Hoy and J. S. Ward went out in a boat to his assistance. They saw the fish swim ashore, near shore, after several attempts. Hoy fastened an iron hook in the side of the muskallonge, and it took him 15 minutes to haul forty-five pounds and four ounces, eight pounds heavier than the biggest one ever previously taken in Conesus Lake.

Landing a 45-pound Muskallonge.

GROVELAND, N. Y., June 10.—Alfred Sicker of this place opened the fishing season on Conesus Lake by breaking all previous single-catch records in the war of muskallonges. Sicker was trolling past Maple Beach when he got the strike. He was rowing fast, but the strike was so heavy that it stopped the boat and almost jerked the fisherman over the gunwale. Before he could get the fish well in hand, it had turned the boat around in the water and started to roll. The fish was so large it tended to roll for half an hour. He was then nearly "tuckered out," and he called for help. W. E. Hoy and J. S. Ward went out in a boat to his assistance. They saw the fish swim ashore, near shore, after several attempts. Hoy fastened an iron hook in the side of the muskallonge, and it took him 15 minutes to haul forty-five pounds and four ounces, eight pounds heavier than the biggest one ever previously taken in Conesus Lake.

Landing a 45-pound Muskallonge.

GROVELAND, N. Y., June 10.—Alfred Sicker of this place opened the fishing season on Conesus Lake by breaking all previous single-catch records in the war of muskallonges. Sicker was trolling past Maple Beach when he got the strike. He was rowing fast, but the strike was so heavy that it stopped the boat and almost jerked the fisherman over the gunwale. Before he could get the fish well in hand, it had turned the boat around in the water and started to roll. The fish was so large it tended to roll for half an hour. He was then nearly "tuckered out," and he called for help. W. E. Hoy and J. S. Ward went out in a boat to his assistance. They saw the fish swim ashore, near shore, after several attempts. Hoy fastened an iron hook in the side of the muskallonge, and it took him 15 minutes to haul forty-five pounds and four ounces, eight pounds heavier than the biggest one ever previously taken in Conesus Lake.

Landing a 45-pound Muskallonge.

GROVELAND, N. Y., June 10.—Alfred Sicker of this place opened the fishing season on Conesus Lake by breaking all previous single-catch records in the war of muskallonges. Sicker was trolling past Maple Beach when he got the strike. He was rowing fast, but the strike was so heavy that it stopped the boat and almost jerked the fisherman over the gunwale. Before he could get the fish well in hand, it had turned the boat around in the water and started to roll. The fish was so large it tended to roll for half an hour. He was then nearly "tuckered out," and he called for help. W. E. Hoy and J. S. Ward went out in a boat to his assistance. They saw the fish swim ashore, near shore, after several attempts. Hoy fastened an iron hook in the side of the muskallonge, and it took him 15 minutes to haul forty-five pounds and four ounces, eight pounds heavier than the biggest one ever previously taken in Conesus Lake.

Landing a 45-pound Muskallonge.

GROVELAND, N. Y., June 10.—Alfred Sicker of this place opened the fishing season on Conesus Lake by breaking all previous single-catch records in the war of muskallonges. Sicker was trolling past Maple Beach when he got the strike. He was rowing fast, but the strike was so heavy that it stopped the boat and almost jerked the fisherman over the gunwale. Before he could get the fish well in hand, it had turned the boat around in the water and started to roll. The fish was so large it tended to roll for half an hour. He was then nearly "tuckered out," and he called for help. W. E. Hoy and J. S. Ward went out in a boat to his assistance. They saw the fish swim ashore, near shore, after several attempts. Hoy fastened an iron hook in the side of the muskallonge, and it took him 15 minutes to haul forty-five pounds and four ounces, eight pounds heavier than the biggest one ever previously taken in Conesus Lake.

Landing a 45-pound Muskallonge.

GROVELAND, N. Y., June 10.—Alfred Sicker of this place opened the fishing season on Conesus Lake by breaking all previous single-catch records in the war of muskallonges. Sicker was trolling past Maple Beach when he got the strike. He was rowing fast, but the strike was so heavy that it stopped the boat and almost jerked the fisherman over the gunwale. Before he could get the fish well in hand, it had turned the boat around in the water and started to roll. The fish was so large it tended to roll for half an hour. He was then nearly "tuckered out," and he called for help. W. E. Hoy and J. S. Ward went out in a boat to his assistance. They saw the fish swim ashore, near shore, after several attempts. Hoy fastened an iron hook in the side of the muskallonge, and it took him 15 minutes to haul forty-five pounds and four ounces, eight pounds heavier than the biggest one ever previously taken in Conesus Lake.

Landing a 45-pound Muskallonge.

GROVELAND, N. Y., June 10.—Alfred Sicker of this place opened the fishing season on Conesus Lake by breaking all previous single-catch records in the war of muskallonges. Sicker was trolling past Maple Beach when he got the strike. He was rowing fast, but the strike was so heavy that it stopped the boat and almost jerked the fisherman over the gunwale. Before he could get the fish well in hand, it had turned the boat around in the water and started to roll. The fish was so large it tended to roll for half an hour. He was then nearly "tuckered out," and he called for help. W. E. Hoy and J. S. Ward went out in a boat to his assistance. They saw the fish swim ashore, near shore, after several attempts. Hoy fastened an iron hook in the side of the muskallonge, and it took him 15 minutes to haul forty-five pounds and four ounces, eight pounds heavier than the biggest one ever previously taken in Conesus Lake.

Landing a 45-pound Muskallonge.

GROVELAND, N. Y., June 10.—Alfred Sicker of this place opened the fishing season on Conesus Lake by breaking all previous single-catch records in the war of muskallonges. Sicker was trolling past Maple Beach when he got the strike. He was rowing fast, but the strike was so heavy that it stopped the boat and almost jerked the fisherman over the gunwale. Before he could get the fish well in hand, it had turned the boat around in the water and started to roll. The fish was so large it tended to roll for half an hour. He was then nearly "tuckered out," and he called for help. W. E. Hoy and J. S. Ward went out in a boat to his assistance. They saw the fish swim ashore, near shore, after several attempts. Hoy fastened an iron hook in the side of the muskallonge, and it took him 15 minutes to haul forty-five pounds and four ounces, eight pounds heavier than the biggest one ever previously taken in Conesus Lake.

Landing a 45-pound Muskallonge.

GROVELAND, N. Y., June 10.—Alfred Sicker of this place opened the fishing season on Conesus Lake by breaking all previous single-catch records in the war of muskallonges. Sicker was trolling past Maple Beach when he got the strike. He was rowing fast, but the strike was so heavy that it stopped the boat and almost jerked the fisherman over the gunwale. Before he could get the fish well in hand, it had turned the boat around in the water and started to roll. The fish was so large it tended to roll for half an hour. He was then nearly "tuckered out," and he called for help. W. E. Hoy and J. S. Ward went out in a boat to his assistance. They saw the fish swim ashore, near shore, after several attempts. Hoy fastened an iron hook in the side of the muskallonge, and it took him 15 minutes to haul forty-five pounds and four ounces, eight pounds heavier than the biggest one ever previously taken in Conesus Lake.

Landing a 45-pound Muskallonge.

GROVELAND, N. Y., June 10.—Alfred Sicker of this place opened the fishing season on Conesus Lake by breaking all previous single-catch records in the war of muskallonges. Sicker was trolling past Maple Beach when he got the strike. He was rowing fast, but the strike was so heavy that it stopped the boat and almost jerked the fisherman over the gunwale. Before he could get the fish well in hand, it had turned the boat around in the water and started to roll. The fish was so large it tended to roll for half an hour. He was then nearly "tuckered out," and he called for help. W. E. Hoy and J. S. Ward went out in a boat to his assistance. They saw the fish swim ashore, near shore, after several attempts. Hoy fastened an iron hook in the side of the muskallonge, and it took him 15 minutes to haul forty-five pounds and four ounces, eight pounds heavier than the biggest one ever previously taken in Conesus Lake.

Landing a 45-pound Muskallonge.

GROVELAND, N. Y., June 10.—Alfred Sicker of this place opened the fishing season on Conesus Lake by breaking all previous single-catch records in the war of muskallonges. Sicker was trolling past Maple Beach when he got the strike. He was rowing fast, but the strike was so heavy that it stopped the boat and almost jerked the fisherman over the gunwale. Before he could get the fish well in hand, it had turned the boat around in the water and started to roll. The fish was so large it tended to roll for half an hour. He was then nearly "tuckered out," and he called for help. W. E. Hoy and J. S. Ward went out in a boat to his assistance. They saw the fish swim ashore, near shore, after several attempts. Hoy fastened an iron hook in the side of the muskallonge, and it took him 15 minutes to haul forty-five pounds and four ounces, eight pounds heavier than the biggest one ever previously taken in Conesus Lake.

Landing a 45-pound Muskallonge.

GROVELAND, N. Y., June 10.—Alfred Sicker of this place opened the fishing season on Conesus Lake by breaking all previous single-catch records in the war of muskallonges. Sicker was trolling past Maple Beach when he got the strike. He was rowing fast, but the strike was so heavy that it stopped the boat and almost jerked the fisherman over the gunwale. Before he could get the fish well in hand, it had turned the boat around in the water and started to roll. The fish was so large it tended to roll for half an hour. He was then nearly "tuckered out," and he called for help. W. E. Hoy and J. S. Ward went out in a boat to his assistance. They saw the fish swim ashore, near shore, after several attempts. Hoy fastened an iron hook in the side of the muskallonge, and it took him 15 minutes to haul forty-five pounds and four ounces, eight pounds heavier than the biggest one ever previously taken in Conesus Lake.

Landing a 45-pound Muskallonge.

GROVELAND, N. Y., June 10.—Alfred Sicker of this place opened the fishing season on Conesus Lake by breaking all previous single-catch records in the war of muskallonges. Sicker was trolling past Maple Beach when he got the strike. He was rowing fast, but the strike was so heavy that it stopped the boat and almost jerked the fisherman over the gunwale. Before he could get the fish well in hand, it had turned the boat around in the water and started to roll. The fish was so large it tended to roll for half an hour. He was then nearly "tuckered out," and he called for help. W. E. Hoy and J. S. Ward went out in a boat to his assistance. They saw the fish swim ashore, near shore, after several attempts. Hoy fastened an iron hook in the side of the muskallonge, and it took him 15 minutes to haul forty-five pounds and four ounces, eight pounds heavier than the biggest one ever previously taken in Conesus Lake.

Landing a 45-pound Muskallonge.

GROVELAND, N. Y., June 10.—Alfred Sicker of this place opened the fishing season on Conesus Lake by breaking all previous single-catch records in the war of muskallonges. Sicker was trolling past Maple Beach when he got the strike. He was rowing fast, but the strike was so heavy that it stopped the boat and almost jerked the fisherman over the gunwale. Before he could get the fish well in hand, it had turned the boat around in the water and started to roll. The fish was so large it tended to roll for half an hour. He was then nearly "tuckered out," and he called for help. W. E. Hoy and J. S. Ward went out in a boat to his assistance. They saw the fish swim ashore, near shore, after several attempts. Hoy fastened an iron hook in the side of the muskallonge, and it took him 15 minutes to haul forty-five pounds and four ounces, eight pounds heavier than the biggest one ever previously taken in Conesus Lake.

Landing a 45-pound Muskallonge.

GROVELAND, N. Y., June 10.—Alfred Sicker of this place opened the fishing season on Conesus Lake by breaking all previous single-catch records in the war of muskallonges. Sicker was trolling past Maple Beach when he got the strike. He was rowing fast, but the strike was so heavy that it stopped the boat and almost jerked the fisherman over the gunwale. Before he could get the fish well in hand, it had turned the boat around in the water and started to roll. The fish was so large it tended to roll for half an hour. He was then nearly "tuckered out," and he called for help. W. E. Hoy and J. S. Ward went out in a boat to his assistance. They saw the fish swim ashore, near shore, after several attempts. Hoy fastened an iron hook in the side of the muskallonge, and it took him 15 minutes to haul forty-five pounds and four ounces, eight pounds heavier than the biggest one ever previously taken in Conesus Lake.

Landing a 45-pound Muskallonge.